Re Bureau phone call, 9/2/66.

The Bureau is advised that this particular source is _____
_____ and who is considered completely reliable and trustworthy and is an established source.

Source recalled local news item in the Cedar Rapids Gazette and a search disclosed an item appearing in April, 1965, relating to an episode in which CULVER was involved in a scuffle with the Washington police on Friday night, 4/2/65. The article in part quoted a statement issued on behalf of CULVER which disclosed he had spent the evening in the company of a constituent and after dropping him off at his hotel he called a taxi and gave the driver his home address in Chevy Chase, Maryland. He dozed off in the back seat for the drive home, which normally takes about thirty minutes. The next thing he knew he was being roughly pulled out of the taxi and manhandled by several men in civilian clothes who he later learned were plainclothes detectives. Upon being so abruptly awakened he instinctively reacted to resist what appeared to be a criminal attack. A brief scuffle ensued and he then proceeded without opportunity for explanation. He was taken to the Eighth Precinct Station House in Washington, where he identified himself as a Congressman. Police drew red lines through his name on the arrest book. CULVER "expunged them thoroughly with a ball point".

The statement further disclosed that once identities were established everyone was apologetic and no charges were made by anyone. The incident came to light Friday afternoon in a press conference called by CULVER. The only injury apparently suffered was a wrenched back by HAROLD D. BOWERS, Desk Sergeant, Washington Eighth Precinct Station. He was treated at the Police Clinic.

The Cedar Rapids article further reflected that release of the incident apparently was triggered by a telephone call Thursday to the Washington Post. The Post reported that a woman who refused to identify herself demanded to know why the newspaper printed a small item about a precinct policeman who was fined $150.00 by a trial board and not a line about a Senator being arrested out in Number Eight.

Source advised basis for local article was front page story of the Washington Post dated 4/10/65 written by ALFRED E. LEWIS, Washington Post staff writer. He recalled that a rather complete account of all pertinent details appeared in that article. He stated further that similar data was published in the Chicago Tribune and the Des Moines Register on the same date. He believed the latter two news articles were based on the Washington Post source.

The above data is being transmitted by mail in view of information received from the Bureau on 9/2/66 that similar information had been located through Washington, D. C., sources.

WFO 161-

The U. S. Congressman from Iowa admitted on 4/9/65 scuffling with five 8th Precinct policemen who pulled him sound asleep from a cab a week before.

Representative JOHN C. CULVER, 32, Democrat of Iowa, called reporters to his office and explained that on the prior Friday night with several constituents he went to several places, had drinks and fell asleep while en route to his Chevy Chase home.

The cab driver not being able to find the address and not being able to rouse the fare drove to Precinct #8. The Desk Clerk and four precinct detectives pulled him from the cab. Awakened, he felt he was being attacked by men in civilian clothes. He was charged with disorderly conduct.

According to Captain O'CONNELL of the 8th Precinct when they found who he was and heard his explanation drew a single line through the entry on the arrest book. CULVER picked up the ballpen and marked all over the entry.

The files of the "Evening Star" Library as checked on September 2, 1966, revealed that an article appeared in the "Evening Star" Newspaper datelined 4/10/65, entitled, "Congressman Describes Scuffle With Police." The article indicated that the following events came to light a week after the episode occurred. Congressman CULVER of Iowa stated he had been to dinner at the LeBistro Restaurant with a group of constituents and had taken a cab afterwards to his Chevy Chase home. While en route the Congressman stated he apparently dosed off.

The driver of the taxicab drove to the 8th Precinct, MPD, and told Sergeant HAROLD D. BOWERS about his sleeping fare. According to the article, Sergeant BOWERS tugged at CULVER but could not wake him and plainclothes privates ROBERT G. DENNELL and DOUGLAS C. TAYLOR came out to assist Sergeant BOWERS. CULVER stated "My first impression was that I was being attacked," said CULVER, "I resisted. There is no question about it. It was an instinctive reaction." It took five police officers to subdue him. The article stated that CULVER's identity was not discovered by the police until after they had entered his name in the arrest book.

His name was then crossed out with a red line by the police and CULVER inked it over more thoroughly with a ballpoint pen.

Article I, Section 6, of the Constitution stipulates that Congressmen are privileged from arrest.

CULVER stated he was not proud of the episode hopeful it would not injure his career. He also stated he was sorry about Sergeant BOWERS who was treated at the police clinic the next day for a wrenched back.

The article indicated that CULVER had been a fullback on Harvard University football team.

The file also contained a clipping from the "Washington Post" datelined 4/10/65 by ALFRED E. LEWIS, Washington Post Staff Writer, captioned, "Helpful Hacker's Handful. Cabbie's Fare Turns Out To Be A REAL Sleeper." The article contained substantially the same information as reported in the "Evening Star" and quoted CULVER as stating as follows: "The first thing I knew there were these three guys I had never seen before pulling and hauling me around. I thought I was being attacked and reacted accordingly. I wasn't intoxicated. I was dead tired. I was full and then there were those drinks."

Eighth Precinct Captain JOHN O'CONNELL said two more men were required to help with the cabbie's problem and routinely CULVER's belt was taken off and all personal effects were removed from his pockets. CULVER's name and address was inscribed in the arrest book twice. When the police learned he was a Congressman they asked CULVER why he did not tell them he was a Congressman and he replied, "You didn't ask me." CULVER was provided transportation to his home by the Police Department. The article indicated that CULVER had practiced law in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and later during 1962 and 1963 was Special Assistant to EDWARD M. KENNEDY. The article indicated that CULVER had played football for Harvard University and had been drafted by the Chicago Bears but had not played any professional football.

The above article contained no additional pertinent information.
